

Environmental tribunal planned

Complaints' centre to hear disputes, gauge public views, says Ngala

By CHEGE wa GACHAMBA and ELIZABETH GITONGA

A tribunal to hear disputes on environmental degradation will be set up. A 'complaints' centre has also been established to enable the government to gauge public feelings about the environment, said Environment Minister Noah Ngala yesterday. This will enable the government to implement the Environmental Management and Co-ordination Act enacted 10 years ago, he said. The centre, chaired by university don Prof. J. M. Njiru, has already invited members of the public with complaints to forward them for investigation.

The minister made the announcement when he presided over the launch of a UN report on the 1999/2000 drought which is critical of the government's decision to excise forests.

The launch came only days after the government formalised the excision of nearly 170,000 acres of forest land for private use.

At the same time, the World Food Programme (WFP) launched an international appeal for cash donations to buy 60,000 tonnes of food for drought-stricken people.

The organisation said the food will be bought in Kenya to help boost local maize prices. "There is a lot of maize in Kenya but the price is below average," he said.

At a meeting with donors in Nairobi, WFP country director Tesema Negash said 3.1 million people were affected by drought in the country.

The UN report follows a comprehensive study by government and United Nations Environmental Programme (Unep) experts at the request of the State.

The two-year drought affected all sectors and caused unfold human misery.

Mr Ngala

animal and vegetation devastation.

It closely follows the El Nino phenomenon and was declared a national disaster. International Monetary Fund estimates that Sh38 billion is needed to restore damage caused.

Devastating Drought in Kenya: Environmental Impacts and Responses was released at Unep headquarters, Nairobi. It recommends the strengthening of forest management practices.

New supermarket opened

Photo/Correspondent

A customer selects an item at the New Nakumatt Nyali, Mombasa, early this week. The supermarket chain opened the branch on Friday.

Pastor's wife says how she lost Sh1m

By NATION Correspondent

A television evangelist's wife yesterday recounted how senior police officer allegedly threatened her family, making them part with Sh1 million to win their freedom.

Evangelist Pius Muiru's wife --Lucy-- told a Nairobi court that they were arrested by a police reservist and a constable who told them that Mr Muiru was wanted by Interpol for some crime he had allegedly committed.

Mrs Muiru was testifying before Kibera Senior Principal Magistrate Wanjiru Karanja in a case in which the Kilima police chief, Chief Inspector Gilbert Otieno; police reservist Dan Ochieng Were, police constable Gideon Kareiti Mukaria and four others are charged with obtaining Sh2 million from her by trickery.

The prosecution is led by Chief Inspector William Kijombi, while the accused are represented by Mr James Orengo and Mr Cecil Miller. The hearing continues.

DAY

RS Haven

235, Nairobi, Kenya

TO-NITE

Bee Bop-Rock & Roll Party

Destinee Band in a different style. A whole lot of shakin' tuned to rock rhythm

Going on at the

5th Floor, Kenya Cinema Plaza, Moi Avenue, Entrance Free

the Phoenix players

Repertory Theatre at the Professional Centre. Box Office open 10:00am - 5:00pm - Tel: 22580

Tonight @ 6.30 p.m.

RUN FOR YOUR WIFE

a comedy by Ray Cooney

Supported by RAMCO GROUP

Tickets must be paid for and collected 48 hrs before the performance otherwise they will be reallocated.

NATION Supporting Kenyan Theatre.

NAIROBI CITY COUNCIL

MWARA INVESTMENTS LIMITED

Auctioneers, Court Brokers & Bailiffs

Head Office P.O. Box 90460 Tel: 228363 Fax: 228364, 1st Floor Along Timber Road Next to Polican Factory, Near Railways, Mombasa

Branch Office P.O. Box 1181 Tel: 31084 Fax: 0123-31105 Malindi Complex, Malindi